Women Are Dreamers Too: A 5-Year Campaign to End Domestic Violence in Georgia's Suburbs

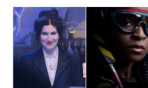

In the tranquil suburbs of Georgia, a silent storm has been brewing. An insidious enemy, hidden behind closed doors, has been wreaking havoc on the lives of women and children. But now, as the calendar flips to 2024, a beacon of hope is piercing through the darkness. Women Are Dreamers Too (WADT), a public charity organization, is commemorating its 25th anniversary by launching a 5-Year Campaign to address this alarming trend of domestic violence in the suburbs of Johns Creek, Milton, and Alpharetta.

A Campaign Born of Necessity

Led by the indomitable Cindy Williams, an economist by training and a compassionate soul by nature, WADT is embarking on a mission to empower women and children affected by domestic violence. The campaign, which aims to raise $25 million, is not just about providing a safe haven; it's about creating a holistic ecosystem that supports survivors in rebuilding their lives.

The cornerstone of this initiative is the establishment of a specialized safe house in North Fulton. This confidential and secure environment will provide more than just shelter. It will offer a suite of support services, including trauma-informed counseling, legal advocacy, medical assistance, life skills training, employment support, educational resources, childcare, and housing relocation assistance.

employment, start businesses, and achieve financial stability.

But the campaign doesn't stop at empowering women. Recognizing the far-reaching impact of domestic violence on children, WADT will also launch K-12 STEM Children After School Programs. These programs will provide a nurturing environment where children can learn, grow, and thrive, despite the adversity they've faced.

A Call to Action

As WADT embarks on this ambitious campaign, Cindy Williams is calling on partners and donors to join the cause. "We cannot do this alone," she says. "It takes a village to raise a child, and it takes a community to support a survivor."

The funds raised will not only support the establishment of the safe house and the targeted programs but will also enable WADT to invest in long-term solutions and facilitate advocacy efforts for policy changes related to domestic violence.

As we celebrate WADT's 25th anniversary, we are reminded that the fight against domestic violence is far from over. But with the launch of this campaign, we are one step closer to a future where women and children can live free from fear and violence.

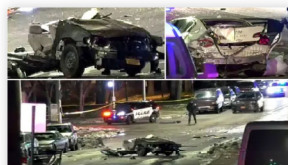

In the quiet suburbs of Georgia, a silent storm has been raging. But now, a beacon of hope is shining through the darkness. Women Are Dreamers Too is not just offering a safe haven; it's offering a chance for survivors to dream again.

And as Cindy Williams so eloquently puts it, "Every woman, every child, deserves the chance to dream. And we will not rest until they have it."
